The behavioral healthcare landscape is changing to incorporate more direct interaction with physical health. As such, the demands of providers, the type of service they provide and communication are all undergoing an evolution of standards of practice and cooperation. Members of the treatment community will discuss in this panel-format, along with interactive questions from the audience, the positive aspects of greater cooperation with the healthcare system and how their respective areas have changed for the better as they serve clients with co-occurring substance use and mental health conditions.

Educational Objectives:
1. Various agency responses to the direction of integrated Behavioral Health Home continuum of services.
2. Identification of the most pressing needs of the co-occurring population with healthcare concerns.
3. Facilitate a forum of discussion and problem-identification/solving for delivery of substance use/mental health disorder services with clients in the healthcare system.
